IN REEL LIFE

During a war, a feud or a schism it is essential for somebody on one side of the question to fall in love with somebody on the other. This unites everybody.

One of the drawbacks to being an accomplice is that your Better Nature always comes to the surface and you make a perfect mess of the machinations that are in progress.

A detective works on one murder mystery all his life, as if there isn't a murder every day.

An accomplished, first class, admirable criminal of course loses to the police, but in the end escapes so that he can be used in the next film story.

You can't be too careful whom you marry. Girls frequently marry a man they suppose is poor—and then he informs them he is of noble lineage.

An Indian maid who yields to the prevalent mania for befriending the white man always gets into a complication where she gets killed accidentally; neatly permitting the white man to marry some white woman who hasn't befriended him. Oh, you ruthless scenario writers!

It is no trouble at all for a broker to corner the New York stock market in five minutes.

SUES JELKE FOR $800,000

John F. Jelke, millionaire oleomargarine manufacturer, is the defendant in two suits, totaling $800,000, filed in the U. S. district court yesterday by Dist. Att'y Wilkerson. The proceedings are to recover the amount, plus interest, of which the government alleges it was defrauded by Jelke and seven associates through furnishing uncolored oleomargarine to retailers with instructions on how to color it, thereby evading the tax on that product.

Jelke was last week fined $10,000 and sentenced to two years in the penitentiary, and the other defendants were fined $2,500 each.
